Employment History

Saint Louis University, St. Louis, MO

Assistant Professor – Non-Tenure Track, July 2012 - Present

Accounting Instructor, August, 2008 – June, 2012

Director – Master of Accounting Program, July, 2010 - Present

Responsible for teaching both undergraduate and graduate courses in the Chaifetz School of Business. Courses taught include Financial Accounting, Managerial Accounting, Cost Management, and Financial Reporting III. I believe that learning is reinforced with extensive dialogue between the instructor and the students, and therefore greatly encourage student involvement by calling on the work and education experiences of both the students and myself. Upper level courses contain significant coverage of CPA quality questions and exercises to assist students in their preparation for the CPA exam. I have made it a priority to develop contacts within the business community in order to bring guest speakers into my classes. I have received extremely positive feedback from students on past presentations and believe such presentations are invaluable in allowing students to see how textbooks and classroom lectures translate to “real world” implementation.

My responsibilities as Director of the Master of Accounting Program include reviewing applicant’s files, making admission recommendations, and advising students on course schedules, CPA examination preparation, and career opportunities. Additional duties include developing promotional materials to promote the program externally, as well as meeting with prospective applicants. I was also the primary developer of the MACC Study Abroad program that is now offered annually at our Madrid campus, as well as a key contributor to the development of the CPA review course which is offered as our Accounting Capstone. In addition to the roles and responsibilities listed above, I also insure that I maintain and develop relationships with firm and business recruiters when they attend events located within the CSB. I believe fostering these relationships and communicating effectively with these contacts ultimately provides internship and job opportunities for our students.

Archdiocese of St. Louis, St. Louis, MO

Consultant, January 2017 – Present

In conjunction with personnel from the Archdiocese of St. Louis, along with the Emerson Leadership Institute at Saint Louis University, I developed a course that provides newly ordained priests with the fundamental accounting and business knowledge necessary to ultimately serve as pastor of their own parish. While the participants in the course are trained extensively to serve their ministry as pastor, the business foundation in their seminary education is non-existent. During the course, each participant uses the financial statements from their own parish to complete numerous assignments. This provides invaluable experience for the participants as they are able to discuss issues within their parishes with me during and after the completion of the course. I have had the opportunity to assist participants with questions related to budgeting, fund-raising, capital e
